Number of players: 2+
Space: Room for a circle
Materials needed: None

Procedure:
Divide into pairs and choose who is “A” and “B.” “A” will interview “B” for approximately 5 minutes. Questions should be spontaneous and, ideally, responses should not be written down. Switch after 5 minutes. When everyone has been interviewed, gather into a circle and ask each player to introduce his or her partner to the group.

Possible side coaching:
“Try to find out what makes your partner truly unique!”
“Find at least 3 interesting things you can share about your partner.”

Variations:
Ask players to imagine they are introducing their partner on a TV show or in a documentary film. To flesh out a dramatic situation, try interviewing in role [i.e. as detectives and suspects, etc.].

Processing points:
- Which did you prefer: interviewing or being interviewed? Why?
- What new (or surprising) things did you learn about our group?
- What [dramatic or real life] situations might require interviewing?

Possible learning areas:
Questioning skills, listening skills, speaking skills
